Abstract: Travelers had to exercise caution in the past because there were few inns and they frequently hosted dishonest innkeepers who could steal guests' possessions. Protecting guest belongings became essential as hotels developed. Hotels provide secure safe deposit boxes even though they disclaim liability for items left in rooms. The front desk staff is in charge of these bank-style lockers, and access is granted with two keys. The combination of a visitor's key and the cashier's key, which is recorded in an operating register, opens the locker. It's possible to pay for this service. Electronic safes in the rooms of contemporary hotels can be unlocked using a unique code. While welcomed, the hotel disclaims responsibility for any misplaced items. The hotel sector of today places a high priority on guest convenience and security.
