Abstract: This study identifies trade & environmental enterprises as a factor which manipulates the working of WTO & therefore challenges in achieving the balance between economics pretensions & environmental pretensions. Since the foremost days of the World Trade Organization (WTO), one of the most prominent areas of debate has been whether the trading system, as it's presently designed, is suitable to serve the vast and varied requirements of our natural terrain. These questions have come more complex over time, as the impacts of climate change have worsened, our fisheries have faced adding situations of exploitation, biodiversity losses have escalated, and plastic waste pollution has grown, to name but a many exemplifications. The main route of information is gathered with the help of a set of questions through area exploration containing a set of questions that was designed according to Problems Faced by the People about the trade & environmental enterprises as a factor which manipulates the working of WTO & therefore challenges in achieving the balance between economics pretensions & environmental pretensions. To save cost and time and to maintain the cooperation and goodwill of the repliers; the questions were kept simple and straight to the point.
